HRM's $1M bill for city hall repairs

PAUL MCLEOD
paul.mcleod@metronews.ca

RENOVATIONS It weathered the Halifax Explosion just fine, but a series of botched renovations has Halifax City Hall needing $1 million in repairs.

A tender offer of $1,031,991 will be presented to council tomorrow for a stone masonry facelift of the national historic site.

The downtown building was completed in 1889 and survived the 1917 explosion that rocked the city with only minimal damage. But things went downhill from there.

The building received an acid/steam cleaning in 1948, according to HRM staff. The original slate roof was removed in 1950 and another major restoration project to the exterior was carried out in 1982-1983.

"Despite the best of intentions, the parging, re-pointing and coating of the sandstone and decorative elements did more harm than good," reads a staff report.

The report says the condition of the masonry is now very poor with extensive deterioration and it's rapidly getting worse.

The approximately $1-million bid from Coastal Restoration & Masonry Ltd. was the cheapest of four offers. It covers phase one of what is expected to be a three- or four-year restoration project. HRM received $1.3 million in stimulus money for the program.

Cleaning up a mess

Premier blames budgetary challenges on previous Tory government

Squeezed between an irritated electorate and public debt, Nova Scotia's NDP premier will employ step-by-step spending controls in what's shaping up to be a politically crucial spring session for his government.

Darrell Dexter says he believes the public will understand when he gradually restricts spending on public programs — even if he has faced personal criticism for dipping into the public purse.

"We need to have an expenditure management initiative that isn't just about the short term in one year, but actually rolls out over a number of "The past they (the Tories) created is dictating the future we have."

years," the 52-year-old former lawyer and journalist said in an interview.

Full details will start emerging after the legislature's return with a throne speech on Thursday. Possible tax increases would be revealed in a budget expected next month.

"There are expenditure management initiatives that people will see. People will notice them," said Dexter.

He said the public told his government during a winter of consultation that they don't want rapid slashing in the budget.

"What they said to us was ... you don't need to resolve it at one fell swoop."

As for taxation hikes — something the NDP promised not to do in an election campaign last summer — Dexter suggests the budget is looking for added revenues, but he is vague on details.

He stopped short of confirming speculation that there will be a two percentage point hike in the harmonized sales tax, hinting at a combination of other revenue-raising methods.

The budget won't be all bad news, he said.

There will likely be continued "aggressive" spending on capital projects as the province partners with Ottawa on road, wharf and other infrastructure projects.

Dexter is blaming a $525-million budget deficit his government is facing on the previous Conservative government.

"The past they (the Tories) created is dictating the future we have," the premier said.

SHEET HARBOUR Police are looking for a man who exposed himself to two young girls at a pool in Sheet Harbour Friday.

RCMP say two girls in their early teens were playing at the Sheet Harbour Consolidated School in the afternoon when they saw a man by the side of the pool. The man reportedly had his pants pulled down and was masturbating.

The girls ran away and called police. The man is believed to have left on foot. He is described as white, five feet, eight inches, 190 pounds, slightly balding with brown-blond hair. He was wearing a black windbreaker and black pants.

Leaders mark day to end racism

HRP, elected officials reaffirm commitment to improve relations

Halifax Regional Police Chief Frank Beazley sings a hymn while attending a service to mark the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at the Cornwallis St. Baptist Church yesterday. Beazley spoke at the service and reaffirmed the HRP's commitment to eliminate racial discrimination.

Pews were filled at the Cornwallis Street Baptist Church yesterday as community members, police officers, and elected officials came out to mark the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

Halifax Regional Police Chief Frank Beazley was on hand to reaffirm the force's commitment to improve race relations within the municipality.

"March 21 marks the anniversary of the 1960 Sharpeville massacre in South Africa, where peaceful demonstrators against Apartheid were wounded and killed," said Beazley. "Halifax Regional Police publicly ... declares our intention to work towards the elimination of racism in co-operation with all persons in the community we serve."

Const. Anthony Sparks addressed the congregation after Beazley. He said HRP has made and will continue to make race relations a priority in policing.

"I am currently employed with an organization that focuses on diversity and race relations, that has made deliberate attempts to bring back the idea of

"Racism has no place in our community."

Mayor Peter Kelly

community policing," said Sparks. "This helps encourage officers to change their attitudes, their perspectives, their behaviours towards citizens and the way they do police work."

But Sparks noted that racial discrimination is not an issue specific to HRM or the HRP.

"The elimination of racial discrimination is not a local issue, but a global concern as well," he said. "Whether we live in Halifax, Nova Scotia or Sharpeville, South Africa, racial discrimination affects us emotionally, psychologically, as well as spiritually."

Mayor Peter Kelly, who was on hand for the service, said while HRM still faces many race-related challenges, he feels the municipality has made positive strides.

"Racism has no place in our community," said Kelly. "No community is perfect, we strive to do better each and every day ... we continue to make sure that all voices are heard, and we're working together for the betterment of the community."

Fatal accident result of blown tire: RCMP

INVESTIGATION RCMP say a car accident on Highway 102 near Truro that killed a Nova Scotia man last week was caused by a blown tire.

Sgt. Al Affleck says the cause was determined after a vehicle inspection, scene evidence and eyewitness accounts of the accident on Thursday.

Affleck says the victim was 37-year-old Michael St. Peter of Maccan, N.S.

St. Peter's wife, who was driving, and their 12-year-old son were taken to hospital, treated and released.

The man was pronounced dead at the scene.

Investigators say the car swerved out of control, hit the shoulder and started rolling.

News in brief

STREET RACING One man remains in hospital and another was charged with street racing after a car crash on Sackville Drive Friday morning. RCMP believe a Hyundai Tiburon and Mazda RX8 were at the intersection of Skyridge and Sackville Drive around 8 a.m. when both headed east at a high rate of speed. The 26-year-old male driver of the Hyundai lost control and rolled his vehicle. He was taken to the Cobequid Health Centre with non-life-threatening injuries. The 37-year-old male driver of the Mazda was arrested and had his vehicle seized. He is scheduled to appear in Dartmouth Provincial Court on charges of dangerous operation of a motor vehicle while racing. As of last reports the other driver was still in hospital but RCMP say they will question him when he is released.

ARMED THEFT A bandana-clad man with a knife robbed the Subway Restaurant at 100 Main Street in Dartmouth Saturday night. At about 10 p.m. the suspect, believed to be a white male between 17-20, walked into the store, pulled out the knife and demanded cash. The clerk complied and the man ran off on foot. The Halifax Regional Police general investigation section is handling the investigation.

ROBBERY Cooks Rite Stop on Sackville Drive was robbed for the second time this month, early Friday. Police say shortly after 4 a.m. a security alarm went off at the store. RCMP and the owner arrived on scene within minutes but the robbers were already gone. Security tapes show three people entered the store with their heads covered and stole cigarettes and cigars. On the night of March 6 thieves broke open the front door of Cooks and also stole cigarettes.

Group opposing Africville deal

Spokeswoman alleges Genealogy Society vote to OK settlement was invalid

ALEX BOUTILIER
for Metro Halifax

A group of people dissatisfied with the Africville reparations deal is attempting a legal challenge.

Spokeswoman Denise Allen told Metro Halifax Thursday the group has instructed its lawyer, Robert Miedema, to file an injunction against the whole notion of the Genealogy Society board of directors claiming that they have the authority to enter into this type of legal agreement," she said. "This (deal) was all pre-arranged behind (former Africville residents') back, without their knowledge, without their approval."

Allen said the Genealogy Society does not represent the people of Africville.

"(The injunction is) against the whole notion of the Genealogy Society board of directors claiming that they have the authority to enter into this type of legal agreement," she said. "This (deal) was all pre-arranged behind (former Africville residents') back, without their knowledge, without their approval."

When contacted by Metro, however, Miedema said no injunction had been filed from his office, and he could not comment on whether one would be filed in the future.

The deal, announced last

Allen said she doesn't take issue with any one specific part of the settlement; she said she'd accept whatever the people of Africville decide upon, even if it is the settlement currently on the table. "At least I would have known that it came from the people of Africville, and not dictated to the people of Africville," she said.

Allen also alleges that the vote to approve the deal, held by the Genealogy Society in an information session closed to the public, was invalid. Genealogy Society president Irvine Carvery denies that claim.

Allen also alleges that the vote to approve the deal, held by the Genealogy Society in an information session closed to the public, was invalid. Genealogy Society president Irvine Carvery denies that claim.

"We held a meeting and the majority of the people supported the settlement," said Carvery. "A full 80 per cent of the people there put up their hands in support of (the deal) without hesitation."

Carvery said the Genealogy Society is proceeding with the development.

"We're clear in our direction and we will be moving ahead with the rebuilding of the church and the building of the interpretive centre," he said.

Pair facing charges of identity theft

CRIME Two people are facing dozens of charges including identity theft after attempts to open accounts at two Halifax-area banks aroused the suspicions of staff.

Police were called to the banks in Dartmouth last week and arrested a man and a woman, who were charged with uttering forged documents.

A further investigation led to additional charges including identity theft, laid out in new provisions of the Criminal Code that were enacted in January.

These are believed to be the first charges laid under those new provisions in Nova Scotia.

Police say Benoit LeMaire of Verdun, Que., faces a total of 46 charges including identity theft, possession of identity information for fraudulent purposes, possession of forged documents and uttering forged documents.

Jennifer Perrault of Oshtawa, Ont., faces a total of 11 charges including identity theft, uttering forged documents and fraud by other means.

Police say the two appeared in provincial court and were remanded until another court appearance tomorrow.

Archdiocese tightens rules for staff dealing with youth

paul.mcleod@metronews.ca

CONDUCT The Archdiocese of Halifax is toughening up its rules on priests and staff members dealing with children.

Mandatory police checks, banning of corporal punishment and avoiding one-on-one scenarios are all being introduced.

The new rules for Halifax and the diocese of Yarmouth were drafted by Archbishop Anthony Mancini in response to the sex-abuse scandals that have arisen across the province. Some changes were required by the church's insurance company.

Some new clauses state the obvious ("all physical contact between staff or volunteers and children, youth or vulnerable adults is to be completely non-sexual"), while others mark new developments for the church.

Priests and staff are urged to pair up to avoid anyone being left alone with a youth. When one-on-one meetings must take place, such as for catechism instruction, they are to take place in rooms open to public view.

The 36-page "Responsible Ministry and Safe Environment Protocol" was designed in consultation with a professional PR firm, according to a letter from Mancini to all members of the archdiocese.

"Since last November, I have consulted with clergy, religious and laity of our church for their reactions, insights and recommendations," reads Mancini's letter dated March 15.

"Consistently, the messages I have received have been a call for a more transparent, open and accountable church."

The new protocol comes after former Antigonish bishop Raymond Lahey was charged with possession of child pornography after having his laptop confiscated while re-entering the country in September.

Lahey's trial is scheduled for April 2011.

There were three people inside the home at the time, but no one was hurt. The house, however, suffered significant damage.

A man believed to be in his 20s was seen fleeing the scene.

UN to cut Kandahar staff

Growing levels of violence in Kandahar, and the prospect of more to come with NATO's unfolding offensive in the area, has prompted the UN and other relief organizations to step out of the way.

The UN is in the process of cutting its foreign staff level in the southern city as part of a security review, said Susan Manuel, a spokeswoman for the UN mission in Kabul.

"There has been a temporary reduction," Manuel said. "We're trying to determine the profile of the staff, or who needs to be there doing what."

Last week, NATO's top commander in Afghanistan,

Scaling back

- Over 100 people work at the UN in Kandahar.
- Thirty-seven are foreigners, the rest are locals.
- Staff cuts will only affect foreigners.

U.S. Gen. Stanley McChrystal, declared the operation to root out insurgents in Kandahar was underway.

But rather than opening with a D-Day-like assault as in Marjah, he said the offensive in Kandahar would be rolled out in stages.

Manuel said the UN security review is a response to the overall situation in Kandahar, which is the Taliban's spiritual home. A series of co-ordinated bombings in the city on March 13 and 14 left 35 people dead and scores wounded.

But a senior Canadian officer in charge of battle operations said he believed the concerns are misplaced and despite their spectacular nature, the recent Taliban assaults were failures.

"They didn't achieve what they wanted to achieve," said Lt.-Col. Roch Pelletier, referring specifically to the attack and attempted breakout at Sarpoza.

"All it's done this time, according to me anyway, is that they killed their own people."

U.S. Congress OK's health-care bill

Summoned to success by U.S. President Barack Obama, the Democratic-controlled Congress approved historic legislation last night extending health care to tens of millions of uninsured Americans and cracking down on insurance company abuses, a climactic chapter in the century-long quest for near universal coverage.

Widely viewed as dead two months ago, the Senate-passed bill cleared the House on a 219-212 vote, with Republicans unanimous in opposition.

Congressional officials said they expected Obama to sign the bill as early as today. A second measure — making changes in the first — was lined up for passage later in the evening. That measure would go to the Senate, where Democratic leaders said they had the votes to pass it. Crowds of protesters outside the Capitol shouted "just vote no" in a futile attempt to stop the historic vote taking place inside a House packed with lawmakers and ringed with spectators in the galleries above.

Across hours of debate, House Democrats predicted the central bill, costing $940 billion over a decade, would rank with other great social legislation of recent decades.

"We will be joining those who established Social Security, Medicare and now, tonight, health care for all Americans," said Speaker Nancy Pelosi, partner to Obama and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid in the gruelling campaign to pass the legislation.

"This is the civil rights act of the 21st century," added Rep. Jim Clyburn, the top-ranking black member of the House.

Internet fuels illegal wildlife trade: Officials

ANIMALS The Internet has emerged as one of the greatest threats to rare species, fuelling the illegal wildlife trade and making it easier to buy everything from live baby lions to wine made from tiger bones, conservationists and law enforcement officials said yesterday.

The web's impact was made clear at the meeting of the 175-nation Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, or CITES. Delegates voted overwhelmingly Sunday to ban the trade of the Kaiser's spotted newt, which the World Wildlife Fund says has been devastated by the Internet trade.

A proposal from the United States and Sweden to regulate the trade in red and pink coral — which is sold extensively on the web — was defeated. Delegates voted the idea down mostly over concerns the increased regulations might impact poor fishing communities. Trade on the web poses "one of the biggest challenges facing CITES," said Paul Todd, a campaign manager for the International Fund for Animal Welfare. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Easy to find sources of inspiration

theurbanscrawl@gmail.com

'I'll admit, I've often stopped myself on the way to a goal or dream because I've thought, "How can I possibly do this on my own." Last week, two people opened my eyes to what you can do when you set your mind to it.

Mary-Eleanor Walker decided one day over tea with a friend that she was going to trek Mount Everest in Nepal. She was inspired by the story her friend shared from a joint in Motion marathon experience and decided she would raise $10,000 for arthritis.

A novice trekker, Walker knew she needed to do it for her grandma, who suffered from arthritis and was a source of inspiration for her.

Walker decided to take a unique approach to fundraising. She rounded up her mom, grandmother and sister, and the four some started crocheting her way to Everest. She's raised nearly $6,000 from the sale of Cozy Cappers.

The $15 handmade customizable hat is not only bringing her family closer together but also raising money for a cause that is important in their lives. Her hats are available by joining the Facebook group, "I am a supporter of Future Everest Trekker — Mary-E!"

Jeff Maldaver is a 23-year cancer survivor. His encounter with cancer changed the way he lived. It opened his eyes to new people and new ideas that were sprouting in Halifax alongside the rest of the world — from macrobiotics to alternative therapies; ways that we can help our bodies heal from cancer and avoid it. When he learned about preventcancer.ca, it resonated with him.

Maldaver teamed up with medicinal herbalist Savayda Jarone in bringing the fourth annual Cancer Prevention Series to life in Halifax. The series is held at the Westin Hotel every Tuesday at 7 p.m. until April 27. Each practical and informative session is unique from the next and is lead by a series of health professionals and environmental advocates. Having attended last week, I can assure you that it will change your life and, if you take action, may even save it.

Both Walker and Maldaver are two of many examples of people in our community who are working hard to make a difference for someone else. It's amazing what you can do when you set your mind to it. Inspired yet? I know I am.

You never know what you've got till it's gone

Andres, Jim, Guiliano. Lately I've been seeing a lot of men. This can only mean one of two things — a) My 19-year-old daughter is home from university; b) I've entered the world of home renovations.

Yes, Liz and I are renovating. Every day our house is full of men. I never know when they'll show up. I never know what they'll want to do. It's like I'm running a brothel. Except that the length of time they spend is way longer and I have to pay them. So, really, it's like I'm running a bad brothel.

I now understand "worker speak." For instance, "I don't know why the last guy did it like that" means, "Whatever happens isn't my fault ... but if it works out, I'm a hero."

And I participate hourly in conversations like:

Me: We'd like the dishwasher over there.

Contractor: Oh, it can't go there.

Me: But there's one there now.

Contractor: I don't know why the last guy did it like that.

So what's the one thing we can do when life hands us a frustrating situation? Whine to anyone who will listen, of course. But, also, try to pass on what you've learned. Here's my renovating wisdom.

Before you start any renovation, ask yourself: Am I really ready for this?

Answer: No. You're not. Wasn't that easy?

Post photos around your home of fabulous buildings such as the Taj Mahal to serve as inspiration. Not because this is how your place will look, but to remind you of how long it's likely going to take to complete.

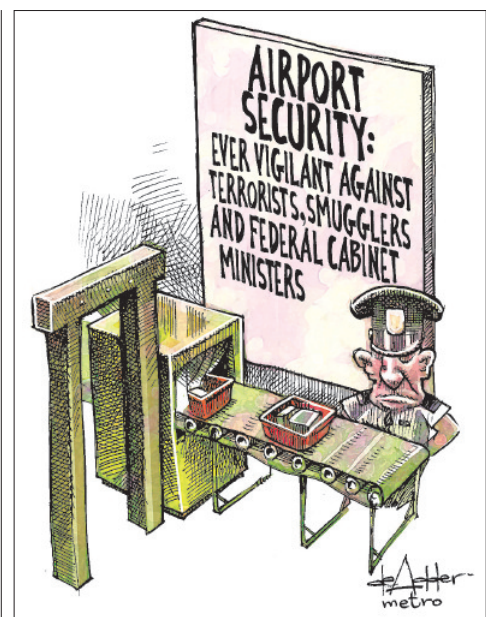

Trust the adage, "You never know what you've got till it's gone." So far, for Liz and I, this has applied to running water and electricity.

Sometimes dreams have to be rethought. Three months ago, Liz and I dreamed of having a beautiful kitchen. Now we dream of not having a stove in the middle of our eating area.

Remember, renovations are like living. There's no such thing as a schedule. Kindness beats out yelling every time. And the point when everything is lying in a heap of rubble on the floor is also the point when rebuilding can begin. Whether it's a beautiful new kitchen, or a wonderful new life.

Preparing for parity

Small exporter's foresight paying off as loonie climbs

Parity preparations that began at Craig McIntosh's small Manitoba plastics business a decade ago have positioned the company to gain from a soaring loonie because it now buys more from the U.S. than it sells there.

The loonie closed at 98.39 cents US Friday afternoon after a week of anticipation about when it would hit parity.

At Winnipeg-based Acrylon Plastics Inc., where McIntosh is president and CEO, preparing for parity included upgrading equipment to increase productivity, cutting costs, revamping its market focus and changing the way it managed finances.

Since 2003, McIntosh has reversed an export-oriented business that shipped 70 per cent of its plastics to the U.S. and sold 30 per cent at home. Last year, the company sold 65 per cent of its products in Canada and shipped only 35 per cent south of the border.

"Now we're a net buyer

Economists have predicted that an at-par Canadian dollar could spell disaster for small- and medium-sized exporters.

from the U.S. as opposed to a net seller," McIntosh said. "We're coming out ahead as (the dollar) is moving to parity."

Acrylon, which has five plants in the Prairies and 225 employees, produces plastic parts for four diverse markets — windows, farm machinery, buses and playground equipment.

The company has also reduced its exposure to currency fluctuations by simplifying its finances. Customers once paid Acrylon in U.S. funds, which it then converted into Canadian funds that it paid to suppliers, who were converting it back into American dollars.

Since 2004, the company has reduced the amount of business it conducts in U.S. funds from 70 per cent to 40 per cent. In doing so, it has created what economists call a natural hedge against currency fluctuations.

Effects of Greek debt crisis felt on Bay Street

MARKETS Stock markets were rattled last week by the ongoing Greek debt crisis and the threat it poses to European economic stability, a trend likely to continue this week as the country seeks to bail itself out.

The crisis was one of the main movers behind a tepid performance on the Toronto stock market last week as commodity prices were pushed lower by a rising American dollar.

Currency traders flew to the safety of the U.S. greenback late last week, worried that the Greek crisis would undermine the stability of Europe's monetary union and the euro itself — putting the brakes on the Canadian dollar's march towards parity.

With few economic reports expected that could give North American markets any direction this week, there will be a keen focus on whether any solution is coming for Greece's troubles. The coun-

But the European Union is dead set against involving the IMF, as calling in emergency help from an outside organization is seen an embarrassment.

Earth Hour

BEN KNIGHT
for Metro Canada

This coming Saturday, from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. local time, more than a billion people will be turning off their lights to help save the global environment.

Earth Hour — an annual awareness-raising event promoted in dozens of countries by the World Wildlife Fund — is becoming one of the biggest environmental movements in history, according to its Canadian project manager, the WWF's Tara Wood.

"What's really exciting about working on this project is that Canada usually comes out in the top three countries, worldwide," she enthuses. "For the past two years, more than half of all adult Canadians have participated in this event."

For 2010, more than 220 Canadian cities are actively promoting Earth Hour, encouraging citizens and local businesses to get involved.

Critics have charged the amount of energy saved in a single hour is negligible, and power use rises dramatically as soon as Earth Hour ends. Woods sees a larger purpose for this ever-expanding event.

"It's definitely not about the power we save in that hour," she says. "It's about making a strong, symbolic statement, and then taking that message to see what each of us can do — every day — to help live lighter on the planet."

A lightbulb here, a parked car there, times a billion people. For Woods, this is an ongoing project, rather than a single event.

"I think, overall, we hear about doom-and-gloom environmental issues, and wonder how one person can make a difference?" says Woods. "I might drive a hybrid and have all energy-efficient appliances, and look out the window and see my neighbour driving to work in his Hummer. But that's where the beauty of Earth Hour comes in. It's very positive, celebratory and inclusive. It's all about people making it their own."

And while the event has grown exponentially since debuting in Sydney, Australia just three years ago, Woods looks forward to a time when Earth Hour won't be anything special at all.

"I think the best-case scenario is we get to a point where we don't need events like this because everybody is so tuned in to what we can do every day."

The Halifax Rainmen ended a three-game slump with a convincing 106-94 victory over the first-place Puerto Rico Capitanes in a physical, hard-fought Premier Basketball League affair before a record crowd of 4,966 at the Metro Centre yesterday.

A whopping nine technical fouls were called, but the Rainmen made the Capitanes pay on the last one, taking advantage of a late-game blowup from Andres Rodriguez to turn a five-point advantage into an 11-point lead with just 2:52 remaining.

"We wanted to test ourselves and see where we're at in the league," said Rainmen point guard Gary Ervin, who piled up a team-high 23 points.

"We knew we were a good ball club, we let three tough games slip away, and we just wanted to come home and play a great game."

The Rainmen, who had lost their three previous games on the road and in overtime, outscored the Capitanes in all four quarters. Five players hit double-figures, with Tony Bennett hitting 17, Desmond Ferguson knocking down 15, Eric Crookshank 11 and newcomer Larry Turner 10.

But Sims conceded that the key play of the game — when Rodriguez slammed the ball on the floor in disgust — was deserved.

Mauer staying put with $184M deal

MLB Joe Mauer is staying home.

The AL MVP agreed to an eight-year, $184-million US contract extension with Minnesota yesterday that includes a full no-trade clause, a massive deal that shows the Twins are no longer a frugal small-market club.

The deal covers the 2011-2018 seasons and is the fourth largest — both in total value and average salary — in Major League history. Starting next season, the all-star catcher will make an average of $23 million per season.

Mauer, who has won three AL batting titles and is considered one of the best defensive catchers in the game, was entering the final year of his current contract.

Even though both he and the Twins insisted all along that he would be staying in Minnesota, Twins fans were growing more nervous by the day as negotiations dragged on. But agent Ron Shapiro and Twins brass eventually worked out the deal, ensuring the hometown favourite wouldn't get lured away by one of the many big spenders.

Then the Twins, who have steadily increased their spending in recent seasons as they prepared to open Target Field in 2010, came through with a staggering package.

The $184-million total worth is fourth behind two deals signed by Alex Rodriguez — the $275-million deal with the Yankees signed in 2008 and a $252-million contract signed with Texas in 2001 — and Derek Jeter's $189-million deal, signed with the Yankees in 2001 and expiring after this season.

The Minnesota native was the No. 1 overall pick by the Twins in 2001 and quickly emerged as a fan favourite.

Record medal haul for our Paralympians

VANCOUVER It was a golden finish to Canada's best Winter Paralympics ever.

Brian McKeever of Canmore, Alta., won his third gold medal on the last day of the Paralympics yesterday with a victory in the one-kilometre cross-country sprint for the visually impaired.

It was an emotional victory for the legally blind skier who came into the Paralympics feeling the frustration of being denied the chance to race at the Olympics.

"We're very satisfied with how it went," said McKeever, who races with his brother Robin acting as guide.

"Especially with the whole Olympic fiasco, it was nice to come back and erase the bad memories of this place and have a fun moment at the end."

McKeever's win upped Canada's gold medal count to 10, the country's best at any Winter Paralympics. The previous high was the six won at the 2002 Salt Lake Games.

The overall medal count

PARALYMPIC 2010Games

of 19 (10 gold, five silver and four bronze) is the country's best Winter Paralympic haul. Canada won 15 medals at a Paralympics twice, in 2002 and 1998 in Nagano.

Canada also achieved its goal of finishing in the top three countries in gold medals won.

The International Paralympic Committee ranks its medal table according to gold medals.

Germany topped the standings with 13 gold among its 24 medals. The Russian Federation was next with 12 gold and 38 medals.

Skier Lauren Woolstencroft was chosen as Canada's flag-bearer at last night's closing ceremonies in Vancouver.

During the week she just didn't win her races, she crushed the competition. She won Saturday's super-combined race by nearly 12 seconds.

The music video is reborn

The Internet allows artists to share content directly with fans

MuchMusic and MTV may have given up on the music video, making it an endangered species on television, but if Lady Gaga's new video is an accurate barometer of audience interest, the art form is here to stay, albeit on a new platform.

And the artists who never lost faith in the music video couldn't be happier.

Telephone, featuring Beyoncé, hit the Internet with a deafening blast of buzz and surges of traffic last Thursday and quickly amassed millions of views.

The clearly expensive nine-and-a-half minute video is reminiscent of Michael Jackson's Thriller in its epic scale and its slick production values and pops of eye candy have been compared to Quentin Tarantino's handiwork.

About a week later, the video has now been viewed well over 20 million times at YouTube and the music video website Vevo.

"A lot of people conflate the fact that videos disappeared from television as a fact that the audience didn't want them — and that's not the case," said Rio Carraeff, president of Vevo, which launched in December. "The broadcasters on television made a decision to move away from videos because they wanted to get people to watch TV for longer periods of time, for their own business model. "The appetite for the videos didn't go away, it's just been channelled to the web where people can watch whatever they want on demand."

Music videos are actually among the most viewed of all online videos, and according to traffic measurement firm Visible Measures, they're indisputably No. 1 when you factor in their influence.

The company's "true reach" stat counts a video's views on different sites across the web and also accounts for the hits generated by user-created fan videos, whether they be tributes or spoofs, said spokesman Matthew Fiorentino.

When factoring in fan engagement, the most viewed and most influential online video in the history of the Internet is surprising — it's the music video Crank That by Soulja Boy.

The song was a No. 1 hit on Billboard for several weeks in 2007 and inspired a dance craze but a relative few would peg it as the biggest video ever to go online.

"The brilliant thing about the video is there's a dance in the video and it takes you through how to actually do the dance," said Fiorentino.

"The song is catchy but then there's also this interactive aspect to it that helps." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hiccups

It's not for everyone, but some people swear by speed dating. Will Millie (Nancy Robertson) be one of them, or will she end up swearing at it? Find out in this new episode, as Stan (Brent Butt) introduces her to the practice. Star Jones underwent cardiac surgery Wednesday, which was related to a rarely-performed surgery she had three decades ago after developing a thoracic tumor, people.com reports. METRO WORLD NEWS

Proof is in the pudding

OR, IN THIS CASE, THE LEVELS OF PROPOFOL IN HIS BLOOD Dr. Conrad Murray failed to tell paramedics he had given Michael Jackson Propofol, femalefirst.co.uk is alleging.

Documents from the official ambulance report, which was filled out by medics on the June 25 last year — the day the pop star died from cardiac arrest, caused by “acute Propofol intoxication” — have been released, and state that Jackson’s personal physician didn’t mention he administered the anaesthetic shortly before his passing.

A family friend told the News of the World newspaper: “This is the clearest suggestion yet that

Murray misled the paramedics. Why didn’t he tell them about the Propofol? We are sick at what this report indicates.”

Murray was charged with involuntary manslaughter over the late singer’s death earlier this year. He has pleaded not guilty.

The notes written by the paramedics state they quizzed Murray about what medications Jackson was on.

However, Murray told them the late King of Pop had only taken the sedative Lorazepam and fluids to rehydrate him after he complained of being exhausted following a sleepless night.

From the mouth of babes

SILLY 13-YEAR-GRIDS HAVING TOTALLY UNREALISTIC ALL-CONSUMING CRUSHES ON BOYS THEY’VE NEVER MET ... I LOVE YOU NATHAN FILLION! Ahhhh, the perils of fame.

You’re only 16, received a new car for a birthday present, and are adored by fans all over the world.

Such is life for singing sensation Justin Bieber, people.com muses.

In London to promote his new single Baby and album My World 2.0, the singer appeared on GMTV, where he answered questions from fans about everything from the first song he learned (Row, Row, Row Your Boat) to his love life.

Bieber revealed he’s been asked to get hitched “a bunch of times,” and even though he may not be walking down the aisle anytime soon, his fans — many of whom were waiting for him at the TV studios — still have a chance of landing a date with the young hunk.

Asked if he would go out with one of them, he said, “I think that it just depends — it depends what the situation is. I think that I’m not going to limit myself.”

Going gaga over lawsuits

AND COO-COO OVER CONTRACTS Lady Gaga is responding to a $30 million US lawsuit from ex-producer Rob Fusari with a suit of her own, according to the New York Daily News.

Fusari claims he came up with the singer’s name and persona and co-wrote many of her hit songs.

Gaga’s lawyers counter that the contract between them was invalid because Fusari was not a licensed talent agent, and they say his actions were “predatory and financially abusive.”

Fusari’s lawyer calls the new suit ludicrous.

“Rob was no more of an ‘agent’ for her than she is a Roman Catholic nun,” he tells the newspaper.

A Lohan lock out?

THE HIGHER THEY COME, THE HARDER THEY FALL Lindsay Lohan’s efforts for a BBC documentary may end up getting her banned from India, according to the Daily Mail. By Tweeting about her work on the production, she alerted Indian officials to the fact that she was working in the country while there on a tourist visa.

Sources say she could be barred from entering the country in the future, according to the newspaper.

She’s also been having trouble entering L.A. nightclubs; Lohan was left waiting outside new hotspot Trousdale recently, which prompted her to post on Twitter: “I’ve never been treated so poorly in my life.”
